Serving Our Elderly Neighbors

Seniors are the fastest growing population in the country

“I can’t remember the last time I’ve had meat or vegetables like this,” said Emma.* She was calling Feed My People (FMP) to make sure we knew just how much it meant to her to have the food she had received the day before at our Pop-Up Food Pantry in rural Fairchild. Emma went on to share that as an elderly woman recovering from a heart attack, she has had very few options. She is living on a limited income and has no transportation. Subsequently, daily life is a struggle and healthy eating nearly impossible. Having access to fresh food right there in her rural community has meant the difference between a bleak outlook and a hopeful future.

For low-income seniors, the problem of food access is a difficult one because it is often a balancing act based on factors outside their control. Like Emma, many are on a limited income that provides no grace for unexpected or increasing health needs. Coupled with diminished transportation options, especially in a rural area, and sometimes a non-existent support system, these barriers mean seniors in these circumstances may go without the meals they so desperately need. To complicate matters further, the size of the senior population is growing across the nation, and we’re seeing that increase right here in our service area.¹

The number of seniors aged 60 and up that are served by FMP partner programs has risen by 25% over a 5-year time period from 2015 to 2019. It is imperative to expand our programming reach to match this growth, especially in rural and aging pockets such as Fairchild where there is no permanent grocery store.

“Delivering bags of ready-to-eat food to our senior members has been so helpful. In the wintertime when travel is difficult, having that extra food right there can make sure a meal isn’t skipped.”

To better understand senior hunger, we reached out to Chippewa County’s Aging and Disability Resource Center (ADRC) last spring for help in improving our emergency senior box program. As experts in senior care, they shared that smaller bags of food containing easier to open packaging with delivery more often would better serve the needs of their members. We have received positive response from this change and have used this as a model for other programs. We are also working to partner with meal sites, senior centers and other organizations to make more food available to those who need it.

By listening to voices like Emma’s, and by working alongside our valued partners, we are improving food options to our senior neighbors in the wake of this growing need. Support like yours makes this possible. Thank you!

Note from the Director

Feed My People’s strength comes from its partnerships. We share a common goal of strengthening communities through hunger relief with hundreds of organizations in our service area.

Together we learn from each other, encourage each other, and help one another build capacity to do this work better. Many partners shared with us specific new efforts they will make in 2020 to reach more people or improve sustainability for those they have in place. I find this especially encouraging and energizing.

Stepping Stones, a program in Dunn County that offers food, shelter and support, is developing its rural outreach efforts. I recently spoke with Kris Pawlowski, the director of the food pantry. I am impressed with the work Stepping Stones is doing to lift barriers for those experiencing food insecurity in rural parts of Dunn County. They have developed ways to distribute food closer to where people are in Colfax, Sand Creek, Ridgeland and Downsville. Kris is pleased with the broader impact they now have. Our respect goes both ways as she credits Feed My People with providing ideas and inspiration, as well as where she gets problem-solving support and practical help in getting new programs off and running.

I’m equally impressed with the recent efforts of our partners in Sawyer County. When a large food pantry in Hayward closed, existing and potential new food pantry programs worked together with us to figure out how to share responsibilities for picking up retail store food donations and for replacing some of the hours the former pantry had offered. The whole community will benefit because of their stellar commitment, dedication and collaborative spirit.

It is a pleasure to work with so many toward a common goal. I am glad that YOU are part of it, too!

With gratitude,

Emily Moore

Where is Feed My People Reaching Seniors?

Pantry Partners
Senior-specific FMP partners including the L.E. Phillips Senior Center and the Pepin Food Pantry Meal Site along with other partner pantries share a commitment to finding new ways to serve the increasing number of seniors coming for food.

Meals on Wheels
FMP partners with the Aging and Disability Resource Center (ADRC) in both Eau Claire and Chippewa Counties for their meal program, Meals on Wheels (MOW). This partnership also provides emergency bags of ready-to-eat food to seniors on MOW routes when inclement weather prevents meal delivery.

Rural Outreach
FMP has increased food distribution in rural communities where seniors have an especially hard time accessing food due to transportation barriers.

Pop-Up Pantries
By targeting high-need neighborhoods FMP is reaching individuals, including seniors, who need food and connection to other resources but may not know how to start or are reluctant to ask for help.

Resident Pantries
Pantries located inside low-income senior housing provide much needed groceries directly to residents unable to get to area food pantries.

Volunteer Truck Driver Wayne Abley shares some thoughts from his travels.

“I have friends who go to meetings, give their opinions, talk at open forums, or are a part of boards or various committees, but I tell them that’s not my thing. I’m not comfortable doing that. Give me a Feed My People truck and a route to drive; I’m fine with that! When I began driving, I started to write my time in a notebook just for the fun of it to see how many miles I’d driven. One line was used for each trip. I’ve since filled 14 pages of that notebook. At last count I’ve driven over 29,000 miles.

I have told a lot of people that I enjoy driving because I’m getting out on roads I’d never otherwise drive and going to towns I’d otherwise not visit. Why would I go to Winter? Or Park Falls, Phillips, or Catawba? In fact, I didn’t even know there was a Catawba, let alone know where it was before I started driving there!

Then there are the Pop-Up Food Pantries. Tami is the exuberant person behind some of those, and I’ve been to a few. Once in Fairchild we set up tables outside of the community center. I heard more than one staff member say that Fairchild was a “food desert”. Unless being satisfied with just going to the convenience part of the gas station, one would have to drive to Neillsville, Augusta, or Osseo to get groceries. Some of the people didn’t drive, or it was hard for them to get around, so this was great for them in their hometown to get vegetables. We also helped carry boxes of groceries to their rides or cars if they needed help. This one man who I was carrying his box to the vehicle, turned to me and said, “You guys are alright!”

Another time, Tami and I set up off Runway Avenue in Eau Claire. This little girl, maybe ten years old, came by on her bike. Tami talked with her, and I think she came from the trailer houses nearby. She was invited to sack up some veggies. She hooked them over the handlebars on her bike and was excited to take them. I could tell she was proud to help her family by bringing them home. She was so happy to be getting this food so she could help feed her family.

Overall, I’ve enjoyed the miles. I’ve gotten a lot out of it as well. There are friendly faces, good conversations, and helping hands. Hopefully, you’ll see me around here for a while yet, in some capacity or the other.”

Community Perspective

Feed My People’s Pop-Up Pantry program is possible in part through a grant from Nordson Corporation Foundation. We are grateful for their partnership in reaching more of our neighbors facing food insecurity.

Two young children came to the Child Advocacy Center due to allegations of abuse. Based on the information disclosed during the forensic interview, it was determined that these children would be going to stay with a different family member. With little warning, this family member had no time to prepare for the arrival of the two young children. Because of the food closet that was set up at the Child Advocacy Center, our staff was able to provide this family member with enough food for the next few days to give them time to adjust. We were thrilled to be able to help a family in need,” shared Stacy Boos, a CAC intern at Chippewa Valley Child Advocacy Center.

Crisis comes in many forms. Since starting with a jail re-entry program in Eau Claire County, Feed My People (FMP) has developed crisis outreach programming with a variety of other organizations including the Chippewa Valley Child Advocacy. While providing food to low income families has always been our mission, making sure our resources can also reach those in crisis has received increased focus.

Families and individuals who find themselves unexpectedly in a crisis are often those who have never used traditional hunger relief resources such as food pantries. Our goal in partnering with organizations in the community who work directly with people in these situations is to remove the barrier of hunger so other pressing challenges can be addressed.

When working with a potential new partner, we ask if they are offering information on food pantries, meal sites and FoodShare. Then we ask, “If so, why would a program here be a benefit?” Over and over we hear that when someone is experiencing crisis, hunger can be a part, homelessness can be a part, violence can be a part. By being able to provide food on the spot to someone in crisis, it may give people the strength to face the crisis in their life. It may be the thing that sees them through.

Stories from the Field

Lauren* is a single mother to two teenagers and a pre-teen. Recently, she was placed in the Eau Claire county jail. While she was away her mother thankfully took in the kids, but it drained all her financial resources as she struggled to care for the growing children on a very limited income. Lauren also lost her job during her stay in jail, and upon release at 5:00 a.m. on a cold morning, she was without a safety net. Her mom was at her limit. Lauren had no car and no job. With no way to even access a food pantry at that time of day on the other side of town, she turned to a start-up program recently launched at the Eau Claire County Jail for help. When Lauren received a 30 lb. box of food through Feed My People’s partnership with the jail’s re-entry program, she said, “You have no idea how much this is going to help us. This is amazing.”

- Jail Re-Entry Program, Eau Claire County

A FoodShare participant came to the agency to request an emergency card because she had lost her first card and was in desperate need of food. Homeless and with transportation barriers, it was difficult for her to visit other food resources in the area. When a bag of food from Feed My People was provided on the spot, she started to eat the snacks and stated she hadn’t eaten much in the last couple of days. She was very grateful as that immediate help is what she truly needed.

FAMILIES AND CHILDREN

The Child Advocacy Center is a safe place for children who may have been abused. The staff is able to provide emergency groceries so that during this difficult time the parent or guardian has one less thing to worry about because the child is provided for. FMP stocks a food shelf at The Department of Human Services (DHS) in Chippewa and Eau Claire counties as part of a joint effort to help families provide stability and reduce the chance of children being removed from the home.

SEEKING EMERGENCY RESOURCES

The Public Health Department provides connection to emergency resources such as WIC, housing assistance, or energy assistance. FMP supplies food bags there so they can address an imminent crisis or the crises of daily life for low income seniors and families.

JAIL

The Eau Claire Jail Re-Entry program provides food from FMP and info about resources such as FoodShare application assistance for someone being released who has nowhere to go.

DISASTER

Sudden emergencies can affect anyone. FMP supported a meal for those affected by the Wheaton tornado last fall and has a Safety and Preparedness plan to respond to future events.

HOUSING EMERGENCIES

To support those living in difficult conditions, often without transportation, FMP has introduced a new meal bag program at the Maples Trailer Park in Eau Claire. FMP also works with the Chippewa Valley Street Ministry and local shelters to improve food that is most useable for those facing homelessness.

Volunteers are Taking a Stand Against Hunger

Learn how you can take a stand too

After moving into our new space, we saw a 20% increase in volunteers in November and December of 2019 compared to that same time period in 2018! That’s awesome not just because we love our volunteers, but because we simply cannot get food ready for distribution all over west central Wisconsin without them. If you haven’t volunteered before, we highly encourage you to give us a try and stop by for a behind-the-scenes tour. We have all kinds of opportunities including sorting produce, repacking dry goods, picking orders, driving box trucks, and so much more. In fact, Empty Bowls is coming up, our biggest fundraiser of the year, and we need a whole crew for that day to be a success. Interested? Give us a call!

Thank You

Over the past ten years designations from Thrivent Members to Feed My People have provided enough groceries for over 113,000 meals to those struggling with hunger in west central Wisconsin. Your Thrivent Choice Dollars and Thrivent Action Team grants have helped put food on the table for our neighbors in need and brought them hope for a better tomorrow.

If you are a member, don’t forget to designate your annual Thrivent Choice Dollars before March 31st, 2020 to a cause you feel strongly about. If you need help coming up with ideas for your Thrivent Action Team, call the non-profit you would like to volunteer at and they can help you form a plan.

Faithful Friends

Our Faithful Friends are an important part of ensuring that each day Feed My People is here for our community members. These donors commit to giving every month of the year and pledge their support to making food available for those trying to make ends meet.

When you become a Faithful Friend with your ongoing monthly contribution, you form a powerful foundation of support Feed My People can count on each month. Your gift adds up to form a huge impact over time and it’s easy to do.

Join today by going to our website and choosing to give monthly, or by setting up a monthly donation through your bank account.
